i remember discussing this some months ago; but not the details - IIRC the riseup client would not build from source or the version that could build from source was not compatible with riseup - the AUR or python?/ruby? binaries, or the ones on the bitmask website, were the only way to install it - freemor suggested that the best thing to do was to wait; because bitmask was possibly going to enter the kernel - if that happened there would be no need to these various pre-configured clients
