Description

I don't know how to reproduce this but it keeps doing it at seemingly random times. See attachment.

This still happens. It happens when I'm connected stable to the internet and if it means that a connection error occured then it should vanish at some point. It's lingering forever, I have a one minute interval on mail checks and it's there for the whole duration of XFCE uptime.

I still don't know why it happens but it must mean a connection error.
