Description

In the actual version of XFCE's Greybird theme, the GTK 2 apps doesn't show correctly (specially, the version 3.22.11).

Actually, the version 3.22.13 solves that issue and the GIT version of Greybird avaraible at AUR (with the same version that Parabola's PCR holds) solves this issue.

For more information about this bug, please follow this links:

1.- Greybird in AUR:

Thanks.

what exactly is wrong with that screen-shot - it looks fine to me - i installed hardinfo and the theme; and there is nothing obviously wrong with my hardinfo GUI could you try rebuilding the xfce-theme-greybird package in PCR? - maybe it just needs rebuilding - it does not have any dependencies; so its not clear why the same version wold work from the AUR - does the AUR PKGBUILD have any dependencies?

This is the screenshot that I have from the desktop PC of Parabola installation that I'm using, which haves over 4 years working with the version avariable in Parabola repos.

Recently, I did a fresh installation of Parabola GNU/Linux-libre in my netbook and the version avariable of Greybird doesn't show correctly in GTK2 based apps. Same case happened in a fresh install of Arch Linux XFCE with the version 3.22.11 of the quoted theme avariable in AUR repo which I solved installing This version (actually, the package xfce4-theme-greybird is on the version 3.22.13, which haves many bugfixes for fresh installations of XFCE desktop enviroments).
