Is Bazaar actually better than git for this? I think the only real issue with git is that memory usage when adding large files is kinda crazy.

What about a MediaGoblin install? (I should have done the MediaGoblin new user testing at SpinachCon. Oh well (I spent all my time with SandStorm)).

1) Git's not centralized revision control, it is needed for some user that needs limited space for its hardware to edit any project, and Bazaar is distributed and/or centralized.

2) Bazaar can create branch as folder and can delete deprecated branch to liberate space data.

MediaGoblin is the better option for hosting and sharing images, sounds and videos, but I need revision control for editing complex multimedia files like: using several images, sounds and videos to build/render better video into in a source code.
